Madrid – The current health situation due to the pandemic has highlighted the importance of having insurance that covers all aspects deriving from professional activity. That's why Generali has launched its new "Professional Indemnity" insurance, aiming to support the self-employed and companies engaged in certain business activities.

This Professional Indemnity insurance is dedicated to professionals involved in low- or medium-risk professional activities in the fields of communication and marketing, advisory services and consultancy, education and welfare, computing, engineering and architecture, in the economic, legal and administrative sector.

In addition to this guaranteed cover, Generali offers a range of optional covers through which it intends to expand the scope of the service provided, including Professional, Tenant's and Operational Liability, Loss of Key Personnel, Reputation Management, Defamation and Slander and Mitigation Costs or Payment of Outstanding Fees.

Carlos Gomez Pascual, Head of GC&C Iberia & Latam, said: "The new service Generali is making available for business organisations has been developed by GC&C, which specialises in solutions of this type and has global experience in the management of personalised client solutions. Both the self-employed and SMEs need the peace of mind of knowing that they can rely on a wide range of covers spanning all aspects deriving from their professional activity. That's why, as a means of fulfilling our ambition of becoming a lifetime partner to our customers and adding value beyond the policy, we provide solutions to allow them to continue carrying out their professional work, even in challenging times like the present."
