Praetorian allows for companies with complex insurance needs to work collaboratively with the Generali team of experienced underwriters to develop customized solutions, which optimize the balance of risk transfer a company takes on with Generali's highly sophisticated multinational casualty program capabilities. Praetorian offers a flexible solution for the unique and complex needs of multinational organizations with unique coverage requirements, complex exposures, or unique financial structures such as captives.

Warren Berey, Head of GC&C U.S.A. Multinational Casualty, commented on today's news, “Praetorian was developed in direct response to feedback from our clients and insurance broker partners, many of whom seek alternative financial structures for complex, multinational risks. The program provides flexible solutions that give experienced risk managers more control over their insurance costs. All corporate clients utilizing the new solution are backed by the extensive network and resources of the global Generali Group, one of the world's largest insurance companies.”

Benefits of the program include:

- Customized structures
- Consolidated collateral and cash flow management
- Flexible security options
- Centralized U.S. claims oversight
- Compliant local policies to address broad coverage needs
- Significant global capacity
- A broad appetite for an array of exposures

Bill Skapof, Head of GC&C U.S.A., concluded, “This alternative offering is a natural progression of our commitment to providing the most comprehensive, flexible solutions possible to meet the dynamic needs of our customers. Our highly experienced and dedicated underwriters develop the right solution for each client based on their risk managers' financial objectives. We believe strongly in providing value beyond the policy, and Praetorian was designed to do just that.”
